THERE are other ways of capturing wild greese than by shooting them. A Chartanqua hunter secoped the inside out of a large pumpkin, cut a couple of holes through which he could see, and, slipping the shell over his head, waded out to where a flock was swimming, unconscious of danger. Grabbing a goose VOU have seen Stern's. by the legs, he gently drew her under, and so proceeded until none were left to tell the tale. We don't think much of geese that will consent to be pulled under in that way.

REV. HENRY WARD BEECHER is six-REV. HENRY WARD BEECHER is six-ty-seven years of age, and is obviously to meet their old friends and customer growing old. He declined to accompany to Yorktown the regiment of which he is chaplain. No doubt the troubles through which he has passed have made heavy drains on his powers-they would have killed many men outright, but the Beechers are long-lived. His father died in his eighty-eighth year, having failed mentally before his body gave way. Catherine is over eighty, and Edward not much under four score. Mrs. Stowe is nearly seventy, and other children are living.

Commerce with Mexico.

The Mexican correspondent of a New Orleans paper says that the change of business, which will necessarily follow astruction of so many railroads in Mexico, will afford Americans an opportunity to control a large proportion of trade than has yet fallen to our share. At present the major part of the whole-sale trade is in the hands of German importers, who supply retail dealers on a long credit. These dealers are so heavily in debt to the importer that they can neither change their relation or protest mainst what they deem unreasonable charges. The German import-er, in effect, supplies the people through the retail dealer, giving the latter just enough to keep him going. It is a very compact and powerful combination, and probably no more exacting than importers of any other nationality would be in their place. But the increased trade of the last two years, which has resulted from the employment in Mexico of many millions of American capital, is rapidly working out the deliver-ance of the retailers. Their increased trade and larger aggregate of profits enable them to reduce their credit account and then place them in a position to purchase of whom they please. It is stated also that the disbursement of so much money has wrought quite a change in Mexican sentiment in respect to Americans. They are much more friendly than formerly and more inclined to enter into close business relations with the United States. The new lines of railroads will open up a business for new retailers, who will naturally obtain their supplies from the business centers with which the railroads connect them. The New Orleans journal advises the merchants of that city to send agents to Mexico with samples of goods suitable for the market.—El Paso Independent.

Eleven years ago John Farrell, of Troy, N. Y., swallowed two false teeth and the rubber attached. Attempts have been made from time to time to force the plate into the abdomen. The substance has lodged in the lower part of the gullet. The suffering has been intense, and at times Farrell has been intense, and at times Farrell has been unable to partake of anything butliquid food. One day last week an operation was successfully made to remove the was successfully made to remove the clear of the control of the obstruction.
